One of the most significant examples of settler colonialism in the 20th century was the British colonization of Palestine. The British Mandate for Palestine was established in 1920, and over the next three decades, hundreds of thousands of Jewish settlers immigrated to Palestine.

The indigenous Palestinian people resisted the British occupation and the influx of Jewish settlers. In 1948, the British Mandate for Palestine ended, and the State of Israel was declared. The Palestinian people were forced to flee their homes, and many became refugees.

The Israeli-Palestinian conflict is one of the most intractable conflicts in the world. It is a conflict that has been shaped by settler colonialism, and it is a conflict that continues to have a devastating impact on the lives of the Palestinian people.

Settler colonialism is not just a thing of the past. It is a continuing process that is happening all over the world today.

In the United States, for example, the federal government has a long history of supporting settler colonialism. The US government has forcibly removed indigenous peoples from their land, and it has supported the settlement of non-indigenous people on indigenous land.
