The American team was a long shot to win the gold medal. They were up against a Soviet team that had won the gold medal in the previous four Olympics. The Soviets were the best team in the world, and they were expected to easily defeat the Americans.

But the Americans had a secret weapon: their coach, Herb Brooks. Brooks was a former Olympic hockey player who was known for his tough and demanding coaching style. He pushed his players to the limit, and he instilled in them a belief that they could beat anyone.

The Americans started the tournament by losing their first two games. But they quickly turned things around, and they won their next three games to advance to the medal round.

In the medal round, the Americans faced the Soviets in a do-or-die game for the gold medal. The game was tied 3-3 in the third period when Mike Eruzione scored the game-winning goal with just 10 minutes remaining.

The Americans' victory was a major upset. It was a victory for the underdog. It was a victory for the American spirit. It was a victory that will never be forgotten.
